Students Arm the Cancer Council

Univative Illawarra involves a group of students from a diverse range of disciplines at the University of Wollongong to respond to a business problem and develop a proposed solution over four weeks during the Summer or Winter breaks.

This summer, two groups of students took out the winning places for Best Business Report and Presentation for the Cancer Council and Rollco Pty Ltd.

Five out of the eight students who took out the Cancer Council project were UOW’s Commerce students. Their challenge was to create a business strategy to engage and retain Gen Y volunteers for the Cancer Council.

The winning students created a model for the Cancer Council called ARMS. The model has four stages: awareness, recruitment, maintenance and substitution.

The ARMS model addresses the challenges the Cancer Council faces including developing a media and communications strategy as well as a budget plan not exceeding $3,000.

One of the judges from the University of Wollongong, Les Kirchmajer, said the winning reports were outstanding.

“The submissions for Univative were of a very high standard,” said Kirchmajer. “Both organisations participating in the program will be implementing the recommendations contained with the reports and are extremely happy with the results.”
