The Office of Global Student Mobility is looking for two eager students to participate in an International Exchange Program to Shanghai International Studies University (SISU) in Spring 2015.

Why should you consider studying in China?

The Australian Government’s recent Asian Century Whitepaper has set the following ambitious targets for 2025:
“One-third of board members of Australia’s top 200 publicly listed companies and Commonwealth bodies (including companies, authorities, agencies and commissions) will have deep experience in and knowledge of Asia.”

“One-third of the senior leadership of the Australian Public Service (APS 200) will have deep experience in and knowledge of Asia.”

Therefore, completing a semester exchange in China is a huge opportunity for any student and extremely beneficial for future career opportunities in the Asia-Pacific region.
Why SISU?
SISU has been one of the most acclaimed and influential universities, particularly for intercultural studies and research. SISU is also known for being one of the earliest institutions in China where higher education in foreign languages took shape. With a mission to “introduce the rest of the world to China” and “present China globally”, SISU has won an established reputation in linguistics, literary studies, comparative culture and diplomatic studies.

Do I need to have studied Mandarin previously to be able to apply for SISU?
No! However, students must complete at least 1 Mandarin language subject overseas (if you have no previous language background, you will need to take a beginners language class at SISU). SISU has a range of subjects available in English, including:

- Chinese History and Culture
- Inter-Cultural Communication Theory and Practice
- Investment in China
- Chinese Labour law
- Trade Related Business Communication
- Accounting Principles
