SOCIOLGY OF RESEARCH

The Doctoral Consortium provides an informal yet important space for the meeting of minds and reflection on scholarly practice. It provides an opportunity for the exchange of ideas and the exploration of the interdisciplinary character of much of our work.

This year’s theme, Sociology of Research, encourages Higher Degree Research Students, academics, and others, to engage issues having to do with the fact that research and scholarship takes place within a community of persons; and, like any other community activity, research is subject to all of the frailties and strengths associated with working with others.

The day will begin with a series of discussions from Dr Wendy Lipworth (University of New South Wales; University of Sydney), Professor David Johnstone (University of Sydney), and Professor Ed Arrington (University of Wollongong). These discussions will be complemented by an interactive forum where students are encouraged to share their research ideas, problems and reflections and benefit from the insights offered by all Consortium participants.
