The application of “Learning Organisation Theory “to a community based organisation

Student: Terry Froggatt (PhD)
Supervisor(s): P. Cookes

PROJECT OVERVIEW:

A case study methodology is employed to conduct qualitative research project investigating to what extent Learning Organization variables may exist and are operationalised in a large non profit organization.

An extensive literature review provides the underpinning of a theoretical framework which is designed to highlight the most critical elements thought to contribute to an organizations ability to manage learning.

The investigation examines what is known about Learning Organization theory and postulates upon how this relates to the case study organization through the collection and triangulation of data from a variety of sources.
